Hello Jack:

The September date is driven by the national schedule for fall NPL designations. I will leave it to Jim Woolford in OLEM/OSRTI to give you a sense of how hard the deadline is, but I believe the Agency is required to do at least one listing per year.

Addendum to previous questions/email:

Is September a hard deadline, or could that be pushed back. If a hard deadline, what is driving it?

Best,

Jack

Good evening Tate:

No need for apologies. Over the next several weeks, we will need to exchange and review several key documents including the deferral agreement between us and the State as well as agreements between the State and Atlantic Richfield, the responsible party. In addition and in parallel, we (NDEP, BLM and EPA) anticipate having to consult on a senior level with the tribal chairs of the affected tribal governments and invite their review of these documents, per language in the 1995 EPA Deferral Guidance with regard to sites involving tribal lands and resources (e.g., groundwater). We are trying our best to formulate a recommendation on deferral by late June, well in advance of the September timeframe for listing the site on the National Priorities List.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Thanks for sharing. What are the anticipated steps after meeting with the tribal govs as we move towards this summer? Apologies for all the questions as I'm green to this process.

Good evening Troy:

In response to your email to alexis, here is a letter I sent last Wednesday to Greg lovato, the head of the NV department of environmental protection (NDEP). The letter was copied to local and tribal government officials.

As noted in the letter:

This letter provides NDEP additional detail and clarification on a few of the key criteria that will be considered by EPA in determining whether a deferral to Site cleanup by ARC under NDEP oversight is appropriate.

The letter is a part of the deferral process and was discussed with NDEP.

With NDEP, we will be working with the affected tribal governments over the course of the next several weeks to address their concerns about a potential deferral.

Please let me or Alexis know if you need anything else or have any questions.

Sincerely,

Enrique Manzanilla
